I should be doing my first CO-OP work term this Summer 2020, but I have yet to be matched, what are my options?

If you’re an undergrad student, the following options could be available to you:

1. Not proceed with the Summer 2020 CO-OP work term and continue with 3 CO-OP work-term by exception (or 4 CO-OP work terms, depending on your program.)
   - Please note, there is no academic penalty or any Summer 2020 CO-OP fees for a cancelled work term.
2. Take courses this Summer 2020 term, if possible.
   - Have a look at the courses offered this summer
   - If you can and would rather study, please notify your CO-OP Advisor.
   - Studying this summer may impact your work-study sequence moving forward. Should you encounter any future challenges, please reach out to your Academic Advisor at your Faculty to discuss these, at that time. Once you’ve done so, please proactively reach out to your CO-OP Advisor.
3. Continue participating in the placement process.
   - The employment opportunities are limited, and many employers are adjusting to this new reality which is likely to hinder on Summer 2020 CO-OP opportunities, however the CO-OP office is working to continue matching students up until mid-June.

If you’re a master-level student and you have not yet been matched with an employer for the Summer 2020 term, please notify your CO-OP Advisor so they can assess your situation.

Please note, before making any formal decision, you must advise your CO-OP Advisor. They may have additional information to share with you according to your specific situation and program.
